Nicholas De Pencier examines the complex global impact that the internet has had on matters of free speech, privacy and activism. Citizen Lab, a small academic group housed at the University of Toronto is busy monitoring governments and corporations who are using technology to censor, hack, surveil, and spy on the Internet. Black Code refers to nation states, militants, and organized criminal groups who are hacking through firewalls, surveilling other computers, and downloading information. There are case studies of Tibetan monks who have been harassed by Chinese surveillance operations, Syrian activists tortured for Facebook messages, Brazilian activists who use social media to expose livestream police activities, and Pakistanis fighting back against violent online campaigns against women.

The Apology

by Tiffany Hsiung

www.facebook.com/TheApologyFilm/

During World War II, 2000 girls and young women were kidnapped and forced into sexual slavery by the imperial Japanese Army. In this advocacy documentary, Tiffany Hsiung presents the true story of three survivors who were "comfort women" more than 70 years ago. They are involved in a fight for justice, which involves getting an official apology from the Japanese government. The Apology is a timely and important documentary about the violence that women have endured during wartime and still endure today. It reveals the inner strength of character and conscience needed to speak out for justice; and it lifts up the resilience needed to survive oppression and hold out hope that the next generation will carry on this quest.
